A finance-ops case study, built as a working product

Every short-paid rupee needs a reason, an owner and an ending.

Distributors short-pay; brands lose track. I mapped the owners, wrote the rules and built a product finance ops could run tomorrow: 8 rules, 11 tests, maker-checker.

What is it costing you?

NEW · 1 NOV 2026 GST on an after-sale discount now comes back only via a GST credit note the distributor reverses. Untracked note = tax paid on money never received.

WHAT IT'S WORTH

How much cash is stuck in short-payments?

Monthly billing to distributors (₹ lakh)	500
Share short-paid (%)	3
Days to settle	60
Cost of money (% a year)	12

₹30 lakh

cash stuck at any time

₹3.6 lakh

yearly interest cost

Billing × share × days÷30 = cash stuck. Try your own numbers.

THE THINKING

How I'd work in your team from week one

Start from evidence

Found in a listed company's annual report. Every fact dated and sourced.

Make ownership explicit

Every gap gets one owner, one decision and one deadline.

Write rules you can test

8 rules and 11 tests, including the "must be blocked" cases.

Build controls in

Maker-checker, no auto write-offs. Habits from zero SOX findings at HDFC Bank.

WHY IT MATTERS NOW

The evidence, in three numbers

+14.0% vs +8.8%

Cello World's receivables outgrew revenue

₹658 Cr → ₹750 Cr against ₹2,136 Cr → ₹2,324 Cr: about ₹34 Cr above revenue pace.

Annual reports FY25–FY26 · an estimate that justifies discovery, not a diagnosis

₹3.5–5

Distributor margin on every ₹100

So they recover slow claims by deducting from payments.

WHERE THIS WOULD FAIL

Three risks, and the design answer to each

Distributors keep paying the old account

Old account stays open a quarter; Sales gets a weekly list.

Scheme rules change mid-quarter

No dates and budget from Sales, no valid scheme. The rest goes to a person.

Sales overrides the credit flag

The flag never blocks an order; overrides are logged by name.

I'm Rupak. I spent 2.5 years as a Business Analyst at HDFC Bank: 25+ BRDs, 15+ releases on time, zero SOX findings. I built Every Rupee on my own, from reading Cello World's annual report to the rules, the product and the tests.

A portfolio case study, not a company. No brand uses it yet.
